Safeguarding Sunday and World Day of Migrants and Refugees

Our focus is on how we safeguard all those who are fleeing persecution and violence and hunger.
Pope Leo tells us that safeguarding people 'is essential for the life of the church' and a natural expression of faith, rather than an optional duty.

A Few Words from Fr Joe.....

In September 1990 my mum, Julie, was admitted to the Belfast Hospice, for palliative care. Four years earlier she had been diagnosed with multiple myeloma and begun cancer treatment. It was a long, hard road, losing her mobility, learning to get around using an electric wheelchair, and adapting in so many ways to living with this terrible illness. All the family have many memories of those years and among them a huge appreciation for the kindness of people who supported Julie. From the circle of friends there were endless visits, both at home and in hospital, little trips out and lots of sharing of books and magazines, flowers and cakes. One group helped her with a fundraising initiative to raise money for the hospice which was very successful. In 1990, after a memorable trip to Lourdes, she had a major set back and could no longer be looked after at home by my sister and local health care team. So very willingly she accepted a bed in the hospice and for about 8 weeks lived there in a place where pain was managed, life was cherished and family and friends madewelcome. She died in their care and we have never forgotten the kindness and dedication of the whole team who looked after her day by day as she declined. Every year, when the coffee morning for the hospice comes around, it is a joy to support the people fundraising for the cancer patients of today. We are all indebted to our local hospice for the care they provide and hopefully we can contribute to their efforts to fund this service.
